M-F police chief announces retirement

By Allison Cox

of the East Oregonian

MILTON-FREEWATER - After more than 17 years with the Milton-Freewater Police Department and a lifetime in law enforcement, police chief Michael Gallaher is retiring.

Gallaher's tenure with the Milton-Freewater Police Department is not the sum of his law enforcement experience. Gallaher also has logged time with the Umatilla County Sheriff's Department, the Oregon State Police as a trooper in the Hermiston area and as an F.B.I. clerk in Portland.

Gallaher said caring about the community is one of the most important traits a police chief should develop.

"I could talk all day about honesty, ethics and professionalism, which should be a given in this business, but I think when you look beyond the given, whoever is in this position should care about how this community is policed and care about caretaking of the community," he said.

An active community volunteer, Gallaher has, during his tenure as chief, created and maintained a citizen core of volunteers in the police department.

"I've had a lot of satisfaction in coordinating that group and using them on a voluntary basis in assisting the department with non-police duties," he said. "They're a good group of people. They save us a few thousand dollars each year in overtime expenses by supplementing us; and they do citizen patrol."

City Manager Delphine Palmer said Gallaher brought integrity and compassion to the position of police chief.

"He truly believes in community policing. He really cares about the safety of our citizens, and his officers," Palmer said. "He's had a wonderful history, a lot of experiences as an officer throughout his career, which have really been of benefit to our city," she said. "For myself and for all of us, we would love it if he decided not to retire for another 30 years."

Gallaher said he continues to learn new things every day.

"One of the things I know now that I didn't know 20 years ago is how difficult it is for an abused woman to get out of her relationship," he said. "I used to think, 'Wow, she should just put a stop to it, walk away, whatever.' But it's a lot more complex than that. There are a lot of women in our society who, for whatever reason, it's not as easy as one might think to get out of an abusive relationship. That's one of the things we deal with in our business. And I've learned not to be overly critical of them."

Gallaher said while he is retiring from law enforcement, he's still considering future employment options.

"I'll probably continue to work doing something that maybe is a little less demanding," he said. "I'm kind of an open slate."

Gallaher is the son of Ernest Gallaher, who retired in 1986 as Pendleton Police Chief after decades of law enforcement service; and the brother of David and Tim Gallaher, who also are lifelong law enforcement veterans. David Gallaher served as Umatilla County District Attorney for 12 years, and Tim is an Oregon State Police fish and game officer.

Gallaher professes amazement over the lifelong commitment all three brothers made to law enforcement.

"For some inexplicable reason, probably having to do with the influence of our father, we all went into it," he said.

"It didn't surprise me," said Ernest Gallaher about the across-the-board family leap into law enforcement. "I'm thankful. But my dad was a preacher, his dad was a preacher, and his dad before him was a preacher."
