Hi, all,

A year or two ago, in a largely unsuccessful effort to get my children interested in their history, I wrote a short piece on a GGGG-uncle of ours, William E. McCutcheon/en/an. He was a grandson of Samuel and Frances Noble McCutchen/an/eon, who bought land in the Shenandoah Valley about 1742.

I recently shared the story with someone else, who suggested it might be of interest to the list. Here it is (I used the "an" spelling, although "en" and "eon" would be equally accurate:

My G4 grandfather, James McCutchan (son of Lieutenant William McCutchan) had a younger brother, William Eldon McCutchan. In many respects, William was remarkably similar to the McCutchans who preceded and followed him. He was born in Virginia (Staunton, Shenandoah Valley) in 1792, like many others. Like many others, he emigrated. Like many others, he had a large family, including sons named (like many others) John, Samuel, and William. Like many others, he named his third son after himself.

In other ways, William Eldon McCutchan was completely unique. His most remarkable characteristic was simply that he never stopped moving. Here is what he did:

In 1810, he moved directly to Indiana Territory, skipping the usual stop in Kentucky. Indiana was still largely controlled by the Indians, but William settled and farmed on Big Indian Creek, just west of Louisville, Kentucky. In 1811, his older brother, James, was in Indiana, fighting Indians north of William at the Battle of Tippecanoe. James had six horses shot out from under him, and had a belly full. He was headed back to Virginia, but stopped off to see William on Big Indian Creek. He liked the country, and decided to stay and our family's history was forever changed. James settled near William, and never moved again.

William married Susanna Thornton in Indiana, and they had six children between 1819 and 1834. Susanna died in 1834, possibly in childbirth (son Samuel was born in that year).

William remarried, marrying Elizabeth Galloway, with whom he had an additional five children (5 in Indiana, and the last in Iowa, in 1862). In about 1850, William moved to Iowa again a territory, again in Indian country (the first white child had been born in Iowa in 1842). He settled there, and finished raising his family. His sons and daughters married, and in 1865 were still living in Iowa.

In 1865, about two-thirds of William's family decided to move themselves and their families to Oregon, joining a wagon train on the Oregon Trail. William, by then 73 years old, joined them! Sons

John, Samuel, and William Jr., and daughters Hannah and Mahala and their families all went but not all got there. William E.'s son John died of typhoid fever on the South Fork of the Platte River, in Nebraska Territory, on July 14, 1865. His widow and children split off at that point, going on to California. The remainder, including father/grandfather William, went on to Yamhill, Oregon, where they settled, lived, and died. William passed on in about 1875. His very full life had included two wives, eleven children, god knows how many grandchildren, and four major emigrations:

-- Virginia to Indiana, 1810

-- Indiana to Iowa, 1850

-- Iowa to Oregon, 1865

Lewis and Clark, Kit Carson, and Jim Bridger made even earlier coast to coast trips but these men were explorers. William was a farmer, although he fought Indians from time to time. I know of no other McCutchan in fact, I know of no other person by any name whose history is equal to what this man did in a single lifetime.
